Dietary cholesterol, fat and plasma lipids in the normal, non-insulin dependent diabetic patient. In this controlled trial, 18 subjects were placed on a diet low in cholesterol, but high in unsaturated fat (an olive-oil enriched, low-cholesterol diet) for a 6-week period. At the end of the study, the subject's diet was increased to one high in cholesterol and saturated fat (on a snack-food type low-cholesterol and saturated-fat diet), in order to re-evaluate the effect of the previous diet on plasma lipids and lipoproteins. Following the high-fat diet, very-low-density lipoprotein cholesterol, total cholesterol and triglyceride levels increased while high-density lipoprotein cholesterol decreased. Cholesterol and triglyceride levels were significantly lower (p less than 0.001) following the low-fat diet than following the high-fat diet. As compared to levels on the initial low-cholesterol diet, plasma triglyceride levels were lower and low-density lipoprotein cholesterol levels were higher. Fasting blood glucose and glycosylated haemoglobin levels increased slightly following the high-fat diet, but were unchanged after the low-fat diet. Only 2 of the 18 subjects became hyperglycemic when the low-fat diet was given. Body weight decreased during the low-fat diet. These findings suggest that dietary lipid intake does not modulate plasma triglycerides and that, in this trial, a well-balanced diet, low in cholesterol and high in unsaturated fat, is more acceptable and more effective in the control of hyperlipaemia in the non-insulin dependent diabetic subject than diets which are relatively rich in either cholesterol or fat.Q: VIM delete a word with CTRL + @ (reverse insert mode) We have a function to delete a word to the next curly bracket:
