CapsandFlats is a Java applet that uses the JNLP API to display a form that allows the user to browse, listen and play music directly from the web browser. The form that it displays has been designed to use the browsers standard UI elements, and allow the user to play music from the web. The basic workflow of the user is shown below: Browse to a music web site that is compliant with the specification to display a music player Click the play button to open the music player Select the number of songs the user wants to play and press the play button If the user is on a computer that is not connected to the internet, an error message is displayed. If the user is on a computer that is connected to the internet, the play button will become a "Start" button. A "Loading" indicator will show the progress of the player. Once the last song is played, the "Finish" button will be activated. If the user wants to browse to a different music site, it is possible to use the 'Back' button. The music player UI element is a java applet that can be embedded in web pages. This is accomplished by the use of the following configuration options in the JNLP file: Additional music player configuration options: 1. URL base for the music player 2. Main application class 3. Music file location 4. Music title 5. Data file location 6. Play indicator image 7. Play button image It is possible to provide more than one music file in the
