Bessie Ellis, general manager, Microscopy, at the Institute of Environmental Science and Research (ESR). “The main causes of death in this country are infection and cardiovascular disease, so it’s important we have accurate, rapid methods that can detect respiratory pathogens and other viruses,” Dr Ellis continues. Infection with the coronavirus is currently classed as a mild to moderate disease. “The virus seems to infect the respiratory tract, and the more symptoms there are, the higher the chance of having a positive test,” Dr Ellis says. “People in the South Island have been asked to self-monitor, rest and stay home, so the health system can be directed where they are needed.” Health authorities have put in place a response plan to manage infection during this peak. “If people do become ill with coronavirus, this is where the health system is directed,” Dr Ellis says. “If the infection is severe and people need intensive care, they need to be assessed by a doctor, and it is standard to have a test for coronavirus before other tests that could indicate further illness.” The symptoms of coronavirus are quite different from those of the flu, so testing is key to differentiating the two.

“A positive test doesn’t automatically mean that someone has coronavirus. We have to look at a range of tests that help diagnose it.”

help. I don't know whether this will work in Windows Vista (home), but it did on XP.

I first ran the software on my 64bit Win XP SP2 system

(Asst Software). Then after I extracted the zip file, deleted the BINEXE3 folder, re-ran the program, and re-extracted the zip file, I ran the program on my 64bit Vista (home)

system. The 64bit

PnKBINEXE4 ran perfectly.

Both my systems now have no errors. In the main screen of WinSupportTools, select

Process | Open Log. If you already ran the software once or more and have the logs open, make sure you select those as well. Use the Scan and Repair buttons at the top of the screen (right and left sides) to run the full scan. On Windows Vista, once the scan is done, you should click on the Update button to download the update for Vista. You could also download and install (using this software) the updated drivers from the manufacturer if you are having trouble with the Vista
