Often, Photoshop is used to create digital graphics for a variety of media in many different forms, including website graphics, business presentations, and magazine covers. Understanding the features of Photoshop Without using Photoshop, the features of a photo manipulation program are hard to understand. But even if you don't use Photoshop, it's good to understand some of its features so you can have a basic idea of what's possible and how Photoshop differs from your online photo editor. Here are some of the most basic features of Photoshop: Layer: You can create, manipulate, and organize layers of digital images on the same page. The layer is an editing tool that allows you to add and move parts of one photo to another photo and create groups of photos (also known as layers) that you can swap out. Image size: The image in the program must be the size of your computer screen or output medium. History: All the changes you make to an image are recorded to a history, so the next time you open an image, you can go back to the past and see the steps you made before. You can open and close the history via the History drop-down menu on the Layers panel. Merge layers: In Photoshop, it's easy to merge layers of images into a single, unified layer. Just select the layers you want and click the Merge Layers button. Selection tools: Photoshop provides a variety of drawing tools for working with a photo. You can erase parts of an image, paint the background, reduce the size, and create new objects. Levels: The Levels settings control the brightness and contrast of the image. Although you can adjust contrast with the Shadows/Highlights tool (described in the following section), you need to use the Levels settings for adjusting the brightness and shadows in an image. Clone: A clone is a perfect copy that you can use for transferring parts of one image onto another. Use the Healing tool or a path to use the Clone Source feature. This feature works with the Align option to move an image to another area of the document or with the Previous option to add color to the selected area. Rectangular selection: You can create a selection, or you can just use the Rectangular tool to select an area of an image. You can use the Direct Selection tool to pick out parts of the image or select a specific object. Checking out a selection tool You can use the Rectangular Selection

Q: Passing GET request query parameters to the url in angular 2 I have a GET request method which should create a new item in my database. this.http.get("/api/employees?id=" + this.employee.id) I am getting a success http call response, however the payload is null and i need to pass the id query parameters. I tried it like this: this.http.get(`/api/employees?id=${this.employee.id}`); A: You need to quote the values in the request. Change your code to: this.http.get("/api/employees?id=" + `${this.employee.id}`); Fiddle: Q: How do I use the built-in AMI DMVS to track the hit points of animals? The build-in DMVS function in several simulation packages is usually the simplest and most accurate way to track animal damage. Is there a way to use the built-in DMVS and several functions to track hit points, etc. of animals in a physically correct way? (specifically, for the purpose of understanding whether player characters make target dice rolls for predators on a 1-or-2) A: The DMVS system is designed to apply as little lag to game frames as possible. For example, when you are making skill checks, there are a lot of maths calculations being done and the DMVS picks the correct ones to apply to the relevant frame. However, to do damage, it's a different thing. There's a bunch of maths, but the answer isn't necessarily available immediately. Usually the game needs a few frames to give that answer. For example, if you have a projectile flying through space, the hit point table needs to search through a table of objects and find the right one. Similarly, when you need to roll a d20 to hit a target, the table needs to search through all the objects in the table of dice to find the dice it needs to roll against. All of those activities take time, and the DMVS is designed to be very quick. To — People were evacuated Thursday night from dozens of homes after a freight train crashed through the side of a North Carolina farm. Five homes in North Richmond were evacuated, and three family members were taken to the hospital with non-life-threatening injuries, fire officials said. Sixty homes were also affected by the derailment, which occurred in rural Morrisville around 8 p.m. Authorities don't know what caused the crash, but the train was traveling from New York to California and was going slow as a result of reported engine issues, according to the Federal Railroad Administration. North Carolina Department of Transportation spokesman John Pope said approximately 30 homes were evacuated within a 300-foot radius of the crash. The wreckage remained on scene Wednesday night and was expected to be cleared by Thursday afternoon. Along the train tracks, neighbors say an older couple lives in the house nearest the derailment site. The neighbor said he has been watching the couple for about a year. "It's getting pretty scary. I've been in West Virginia, Chicago, New York and even Hawaii. This is the most nerve-wracking, stressful thing I've ever seen in my life," he said. The neighbor said he has talked with authorities and believes the house being evacuated is a tenant house that is about 30 years old. He said the tenant moved out a few weeks ago and he hasn't heard from the tenant since. "When I heard it was a freight train coming through my house I thought, 'This is the end,'" he said.Boobie Badass — Serving Erotic Romance and Romantic Suspense A man and a woman have decided to escape from a convention where they were to be the subject of a drawing. While their friends are enjoying each other in the hotel room, they are out for a run in the sea. Stopping to feel the spray on their skin, they soon discover the perfect spot to hide from the onlookers of the convention. During the hot and steamy making out, something goes wrong and they end up together in a struggle that turns the tide for the woman. It is now the woman's wish that they be left alone.
