The technology allows players to receive and process information faster on the pitch, which in turn allows them to react faster and deliver more precise passes to teammates. "I've been a football fan all my life and I've played football too," said Stevie Ann McManus, lead gameplay designer on FIFA. "So I know the sport, as well as what it takes to play it well. Our team has worked with an incredible amount of data to make sure the game captures all of those things very well." The technology was born from EA's Human Performance team, which includes some of the world's top performance scientists. The approach aims to create more authentic and immersive football by capturing the actual and immediate player response to all aspects of the game, from ball touches to tackles. "With FIFA, our ultimate goal is to transport our players into the world of football like never before. We've got so many layers of AI and technology to build, but we're focusing on reaching an extremely high fidelity of gameplay.

This year, we're focusing on a more authentic and immersive experience with our HyperMotion Technology," said Michel Guerin, Senior Performance Director at EA Sports. "With FIFA 22, our players can make a tackle with everything to do with the foot, without missing a beat, and really feel the impact of the contact. This is authentic." Creativity and gameplay focus FIFA 22 also adds a Creative Accessibility mode, which provides players with the tools to make gameplay easier to learn and enjoy. This mode allows players to make fine adjustments to game settings like color depth and detail, ball contact size and resolution, and the size of the camera, which all can be adjusted on the fly without compromising the gameplay. The team has also focused on the gameplay, with some of the biggest changes found in the new Side Control feature. Players now have new, refined controls for turning, passing, and shooting the ball. "The highlight of FIFA 22 will be Side Control, which, together with Goalkeeper assists, connects the player to the match in a whole new way," said Rob Kosmoschka, Senior Sports Engineer at EA Sports. "We spent a lot of time testing how to make it feel right. The result is a lot of tools that were not possible in previous versions of the game. With Side Control, you feel like your hands are actually on
